Maryland colony pros and cons

To continue to enjoy our website, we ask that you confirm your identity as a human being. Thank you very much for your cooperation. John Cabot gets credit for being the first European to explore Maryland and the region of North America. He did it in 1498. Settlements began to appear in the north and south soon after, but it wasn't until 1632, when King Charles I could grant access to the area. The first people began to arrive a couple of years later, and the original colony built an economic foundation based on tobacco. Maryland was the 13th state to ratify an article in the Confederation that helped build the backbone of the United States. When the Constitution created a stronger structure governing, it became the seventh state to ratify the new document in 1788. Unlike other colonies to the south, many plantation owners in Maryland began to liberate their slaves as the economy began to change. It was still a slave state in 1860, but more than 50% of the population was free. Baltimore was the largest city in the region, and it was the largest number of people of color in the United States. If you think about living in Maryland today, then they are the main pros and cons that you want to review. The list of Pros lives in Maryland.1. The country is filled with many outdoor activities to enjoy. More than 40% of the state's covered trees are making Maryland an oasis in the Mid-Atlantic region. There are several ways for you to get outside to enjoy the activities that await. One of the best places to visit is a community called Thurmont, where you can access many of the facilities that untamed beauty provides here. This small town is between Catoclin Mountain and Cunningham Falls, giving you plenty of hiking opportunities that can fill up all day. You can also visit Assateague, where a large herd of wild horses lives on the island. If you like ponies, then you do not want to miss this adventure. With all the state and national parks in such a small area, one of the nicknames Maryland is America Miniature.2. You are in the vicinity of several large, important US cities. When you live in Maryland, then you're going to be close to the city of Baltimore no matter where you choose to be. This means that you are within striking distance of . C, D, and all the activities found there. If you want to visit Philadelphia, then you're about an hour away from this experience. New York is only two hours away. This central location gives you several huge benefits that will help you make the most of your new home.3. Maryland culture is unique in the Mid-Atlantic region. You'll find an exciting and diverse culture waiting for you if you decide to start calling Maryland home. It comes up to the Mason-Dixon line, so there are several elements of southern hospitality that you can find in public. Most locals will tell you that their Northerners, so there is some that you can expect when there is a conversation. This combination of forces creates an unusual, accepting culture that focuses more on being authentic.4. There are many job opportunities. You'll find a lot of jobs available in Maryland even if the unemployment rate is slightly higher than the national average for most of the year. That's because you are very close to Washington, D.C. to mean that their numbers don't get reported on the total number. Most of the jobs tend to be services related to the government, especially those within striking distance of Baltimore. There are several contracting options available because of these structures as well. This means you can eventually go to another city, but you'll still end up with a short commute.5. You have access to many museums and similar activities. Due to Maryland's location next to the capital of the United States, you will have access to monuments and museums that are not available in most of the rest of the country. Two of the top choices in the country are the National Aquarium and the Walters Museum of Art. You can even take a day to attend a series of exhibits that the Smithsonian has on display in their equipment series. There are so many options available here that you can visit another one every week and there are still opportunities to explore at the end of the year.6. Maryland is coming up to the Atlantic Ocean. There are several stunning beaches in Maryland that you are sure to enjoy when you start living here. Outside of visiting Assateague, you'll want to plan a few weekends at Ocean City. You'll find several around Chesapeake Bay that are intriguing, especially since you can get some views of the bridge, which is just outside Annapolis. Therefore, any activity involving water, including boating, fishing or swimming, is available in several ways when you decide to start calling this country at your home.7. The food in Maryland is out of this world. There are several great food options that you can enjoy when you move to Maryland. The fresh seafood that you can find is incredible. If you're craving oysters on the side of shell, lobster rolls, or fresh crab. Several nationally recognized chefs and restaurants are running the position so you can have a great meal with family or friends. Baltimore has a growing presence of craft breweries, and the cocktail scene is thriving. You'll even discover an eclectic set of ethnic dining options for you to try.8. Maryland has a rich history for you to enjoy. The city of Baltimore was founded in 1729, making it one of the oldest permanently populated communities in the United States. You will find a rich history waiting for you in the city with its seaport, which served as the center of the Caribbean trade. Maryland is where Francis Scott Key wrote the Star-Spangled Banner, and that's where Babe Ruth was born. There are more than 65,000 unique sites in the national register of historical sites with just thousands more dotting the position. This means that you have plenty of opportunities to start learning about America by living here.9. There are charming apartments and lofts that you can call home. Due to the history of Maryland, you will find more row houses in different communities in the state. There are also several factories and mills that developers have converted into condominiums, art studios, and lofts. When you're ready to go see the city, there are shops, galleries and offices located in these beautiful historic locations as well. Some of them are even on the waterfront so you can go to bed every night, enjoying the incredible views of the coast.10. You'll get to enjoy a temperate climate when living in Maryland. You still get wet summers and snowy winters in Maryland, so it's a great place to be if you want to live somewhere that experience in all four seasons. Since it is not too far north or south, its temperate nature creates a temperate climate that tends to remain comfortable throughout most of the year. This means that you can enjoy many seasonal festivals that took place here without worrying about what will happen outside. More than 80,000 tulips bloom each year in Sherwood Gardens, making it a popular destination for everyone in the region in the spring. Baltimore hosts the longest every summer that celebrates life in the city. The holiday light festival, called Miracle on 34th Street, takes place during the coldest winter months, which everyone likes.11. There are plenty of cute cities to explore Maryland and the region. Berlin was ranked as the best small city in America in the last decade. Snow Hill is a popular place because almost every house is more than a century old. Bethany Beach and Rehobeth Beach are Delaware, but offer a similar vibe to enjoy. Harriet Tubman's hometown was home to Cambridge, providing several museums and a historical trail. List of Cons lives in Maryland.1. Living in Maryland can be an expensive experience. Maryland could be one of the richest states in the country, despite what critics of Baltimore city leadership might try to claim. CNBC reports that the highest concentration of millionaires in the United States lives there. Current reporting shows that 1 in 12 households has a value of at least seven figures. This means that you can expect a hefty amount, even if your plan is to rent a home. You can avoid some of this issue by living in rural communities in Maryland instead of Baltimore or some other larger cities. The average household income is over $70,000 a year, so you have some space in which to work.2. If you like to live in a big city, then you have only one option. Living in Maryland means you have one chance to make a big city life: Baltimore. There are many amenities that you can enjoy with this experience. Pro sports are widely available, have excellent family communities, and the job market is competitive compared to the rest of the UNITED States. If you have here and decide that what you see is not something you like, then you are already out of options. Living here can therefore be a difficult experience for some families.3. You will need to get used to the large amount of traffic. Because there are so many employment opportunities in the region, the amount of traffic you will have to manage is vast. Even if you might be 30 minutes away from DC, it may take 60-90 minutes to complete your move for a few days. There are never any time in this area, because within two hours of where you live there are so many important cities.4. You're stuck with a combination of high property taxes and home values. Properties that you will find available for sale are priced significantly higher in Maryland than in other parts of the state. The average price of a home in the country is over $330,000. You will find many lists much more than because of the prevalence of high-paying jobs and household income. This means that you will pay a significant amount of property taxes each year too. This means that you have access to better schools in many communities, but it may price you out of some neighborhoods before you even get a chance to start looking. If you live in Baltimore, then you will need to deal with the 3.2% income tax in the city. It's even higher than the county, which charges 2.83% instead. Some tax credits may help offset these fees, but recent restrictions on federal tax law have limited them to many homeowners in the state.5. You might find yourself moving around the Bay Bridge. If you're not a big fan of traveling through bridges, then the Bay Bridge has a span that will make your heart pound every time you're on it. The imposing size of it puts you well over water as you try to get to work or make your way home. When Friday night comes around and people start leaving D.C. and Baltimore to make their way to Ocean City, the bottleneck that happens may be you sitting in stop-and-go traffic for several miles. You'll experience this issue throughout most of the summer when families are headed to enjoy the coast during their vacations.6. Crime is an issue you want to consider. The city of Baltimore ranked third as the most dangerous city in the United States because of an outbreak of violent crime. Homicide rates in society reached their highest ever per capita level this year. Many of the incidents involve drugs and there are some of the more neglected areas of the city, but that doesn't mean incidents don't leak out to the rest of the city or country. You will need to take precautions while living in Maryland to ensure your safety. Locking the steering wheel is useful. Keep valuables out of your car. It isn't a good idea to be walking alone at night in a strange area either. Some programs are trying to solve this problem, but there is still some work to do.7. The country is struggling with issues related to As with many modern urban areas in the United States, there are some major problems with homelessness across the country. Baltimore sees it as a blow to this issue. Efforts are being made to move squatters and clear camps, but there is a higher risk of being exposed to drug paraphernalia in these areas. Frequent fundraising activities have helped create more temporary housing to help people find their way back to employment, but this seems to be a process that takes two steps back to each forward move.8. You're going to have to put the blue laws in Maryland. The blue laws of Maryland are a little different from those in other parts of the United States. If you want to buy alcohol on Sundays, then you will have to go to a restaurant or bar to have fun. If you want to have something pre-packed to enjoy at home or during the rear gate party, then you will need to plan in advance to make sure you have enough supplies ready the day before. These laws also apply to car dealers, with the exception of Howard, Montgomery and Prince George's County. Even professional sports teams are not allowed to play a game before 1 p.m. on Sunday unless local ordinances or laws permit it.9. There may be plenty of wind to manage when living in Maryland. You won't experience as much wind in Maryland as you do when living in a city like Chicago, but it can still get frustrating. There tends to be a stronger breeze here compared to most other places along the east coast. If you live near the coast, you'll discover a distinct smell coming through thanks to nearby chicken processing plants around Chesapeake. There are days when you can smell the object more than 19 miles away. ConclusionMaryland has its fair share of pros and cons to consider, such as most places in the world today. Most people who come to live in the country believe that the benefits usually outweigh the disadvantages they experience on average per day. There are more people here, which means more traffic, but which also equates to new opportunities that can improve your quality of life. This country is not the place to be if your employment opportunity is an entry-level job because of the cost of housing. It would take two working adults to support such a site, and even then there would be several financial problems to manage. The pros and cons of living in Maryland in this guide can help you decide whether moving to this state is the best choice for your needs. Carefully consider each point according to your current and future circumstances. Blog Post Author Credentials Louise Gaille is the author of this post.
